The History of Money

Thousands of years ago, people didn’t use money. Instead, people bartered for things they wanted. Around 6000 BCE, if someone wanted to buy a new goat, he paid for it with grain. But it took time to agree how much things were worth.

Then, in 1200 BCE, people started using cowrie shells as money. The shells were easier to carry than goats or bags of grain.

After that, around 1000 BCE, the Chinese started using metal money. At first, they used small metal knives and spades. But this money was difficult to carry and to use. Later, probably between 400 and 300 BCE, people started to use round metal money with holes in the middle.

However, around 600 BCE, one of the kings of Lydia, which is part of modern-day Turkey, made the first true coins. These coins had pictures of plants and animals on them. Everyone knew how much each coin was worth.

Words in Context

Why do you think they put holes in the coins?

Find these words in the reading. What do you think they mean?

- bartered
- metal
- valuable
- credit card
- plastic
Soon, many countries made their own coins from valuable metals like silver and gold. This made buying and selling easier.

The first paper money came from China between 800 and 900 CE. It was easier to carry than metal coins. European countries didn’t start to use paper money widely until around 1600 CE.

After that, money didn’t change for many centuries. Then, in 1958, there was the first credit card. People didn’t have to use paper money or coins. Instead, they could use a small plastic card.

Today, in the 21st century, many people use electronic money. Because it’s very easy to move around, people often use it to buy things on the internet.

Identifying Problems and Solutions
“Hey, Paige, what’s your phone number?” asked Nina after school. Paige shook her head.
“You know I don’t have a cell phone.”
“Oh, Paige! You really should get one!” Jodie laughed hard.
Nina laughed too.

Paige walked through the park on her way home. In her head, she could hear the girls laughing.

Then Paige saw something in the leaves.
She picked it up. A hundred dollars! The bill was wet and dirty. Who did it belong to? There was no one to ask and no way to return it.

Paige didn’t know what to do. Was it wrong to keep it? Suddenly, Jodie was next to her.

“What are you doing?” Jodie asked.

“Nothing,” said Paige. She quickly put the money in her pocket.

“See you tomorrow, Paige!” said Jodie.
On the other side of the park, there was a cell phone store. Paige looked in the window. There was a beautiful black phone. Paige touched the bill in her pocket. She could buy a cell phone now. $95 ... she thought. That’s expensive, but ... no more laughing from Jodie and Nina!

Paige went into the store. “Can I help you?” the cashier asked. Paige touched the bill in her pocket again. “Um, no, thank you,” Paige answered. I should save the money, she thought.

Paige’s dad sat in the kitchen. He looked really tired. “Hi, honey,” he said, and gave her a hug. “Dad? I have an idea,” said Paige. “Let’s go out to a restaurant.” “Oh, Paige, I’d like to, but you know money is tight right now,” he answered.

Paige smiled. “You don’t have to pay, Dad!” “Where did you find that?” he asked. Paige told him about finding the money in the park. “There’s no way to give it back,” her dad said. “OK. Let’s go. I’m hungry!”
