10 Got It?

LESSON 1

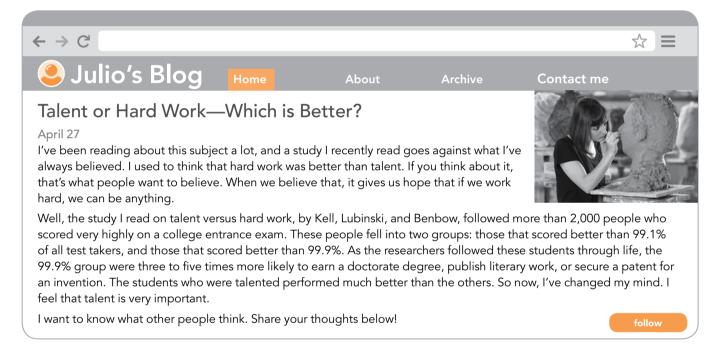

Artists—Born with Talent?

READING

To recognize fact and opinion in a text, it's important to know what makes a fact and what makes an opinion. Facts are details such as numbers, data, evidence, and the results of studies and surveys. Opinions change from person to person and are often introduced by verbs such as feel, believe, and think.

A Read the blog post and choose Fact or Opinion.

First of all, thanks for your blog posts. I read them frequently! I read about that study, too, and I feel like it's really unfair! I believe it's possible to do great things through hard work.

I recently read about a study which gives hard workers hope. Researchers analyzed the general population and they discovered the following facts: people with great natural talent are rare, and, as it turns out, people who work hard are also rare. So, when you're competing with someone in the entertainment business, the science world, or wherever, you're competing against people who probably don't have talent and don't work hard! The researchers of this study say that in the end, talented, hardworking people win, but those that work hard will be more successful than those who are just talented and don't work to improve it, or those who lack talent. I think that the study is really inspiring. Ana, Riverside
